Mohanji's mesaage

You have to rely on yourself. You have to walk your path, and your only possibility for effectiveness is self-acceptance. Otherwise, we are swayed by others' emotions, feelings, notions and opinions and not all those things, and that's quite nonsensical many times.

First of all, they don't know you. They don't know who you are.

Secondly, where are you coming from? They don't know. And how do you even know what the agenda of another person is?

Acharya Board Highlights – Commitment and Collective Participation

- Sacred Kailash Yatra: The Acharya Board extends heartfelt wishes to all Acharyas and participants who have embarked on the auspicious Kailash Yatra with Mohanji. May this sacred journey bring deep inner transformation, profound experiences, and greater alignment with the path.
- Focus on Impact-Based Outreach: As guided by Mohanji, Acharyas are encouraged to continue focusing on impact-based outreach—going beyond the number of programmes or people reached and focusing on the real difference we create in people's lives. Every interaction is an opportunity to connect, inspire, support, and help someone move towards greater awareness and transformation.

Surya Prabha Feizollahi,
Mohanji Apprentice
Acharya

I am Surya Prabha, and I have had the opportunity to serve the Mohanji Foundation as an Apprentice Acharya and as the Head of the Mohanji Farsi Team. Rather than speaking about what is expected from these roles, because I believe we are all aware of our responsibilities, I would like to share what this experience of serving has truly meant to me.

Serving in these roles has been a journey of learning, self-reflection, and inner transformation. It has taught me that seva is not simply about completing tasks or fulfilling responsibilities. It is an opportunity to observe ourselves, understand our patterns, and gradually become more selfless, patient, flexible, and accepting.

Working with different people, different personalities, and different approaches has often challenged me. There have been situations where I felt overwhelmed by the amount of responsibility, the number of things that needed to be coordinated, or the different perspectives and expectations within the team. At times, I found myself becoming too focused on getting things done or wanting things to happen in a particular way. These moments became valuable opportunities to look within and ask myself: Am I truly serving, or am I trying to control the outcome?

Through this experience, I have understood that seva is also a practice of surrender. We do our best, we take responsibility, we communicate, we support others, and then we learn to let go of the results. Every challenge has given me an opportunity to become more aware of myself and to understand that the real transformation happens within.

Being an Apprentice Acharya has also deepened my understanding of what it means to represent the teachings through our actions. It has reminded me that people may not always remember what we say, but they will remember how we make them feel. Therefore, compassion, respect, patience, and presence are as important as efficiency and responsibility.

And perhaps one of the most important lessons I have learned is that we should never forget to find joy in seva. Serving others and dealing with different issues can sometimes become overwhelming, especially when we carry many responsibilities. But seva should not become a burden. We need to remember the joy, gratitude, and privilege of being able to serve. When we serve with joy, the same responsibilities that may once have felt heavy can become opportunities to connect, contribute, and grow.

I am deeply grateful for this journey, for every person who has been part of it, and for every challenge that has helped me see myself more clearly and, most of all,

I'm grateful to my dearest Mohanji.

I see this service not as a position, but as a continuous opportunity to learn, purify myself, and become a better instrument of the teachings.
